Everybody Loved This Fat Man

BY VIOLET MOORE HIGGINS

You may have heard it said that "Nobody loves a fat man," but dear me, it doesn't work out that way at all in Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle's newest picture, "The Life of the Party," a Paramount picture, from Irvin S. Cobb's Saturday Evening Post story.

For there were several of them who loved Algernon Leary, a well, let's be as kind as we can, and say—portly young lawyer. Some of them wrote him mash notes, and these were found in his desk by a professional "vamp," who loved him, too, or at least she tried to make him think she did, and all for a cash consideration offered her by his rival, Judge

Voris. But did our hero fall? He did not—kindly see above.

Then when he went to the Better Babies' League party dressed as a three-year-old, he was so cute and chubby and realistic in his rompers, that all the women thought him "just too sweet." All but Milly—the only one whose opinion really mattered. Instead she announced that she'd gone and got herself engaged to the hated rival. Then a lot of things happened, and happened fast, and Milly found that her fiancé could never have turned a siren down as coldly as did our hero. She discovered then that she, too, loved the fat—or, beg your pardon—the portly man who was "the life of the party."
